execution.

Mr. Morrill then addressed the senate on the hil introduced by him relating to the coinage. He said that the present unsatisfactory condition of our gold and allver coinage appears so pronounced as to demand the serious and early attention of the senate. Though nominally representing the double standard, their relative proportional value is a fiction too gross to endure; and when the fiction explodes, as some time it must explode, the heaviest loss will fall upon those least able to bear it. Our allver coins, and all the minor coins, are practically nothing all the minor coins, are practically nothing more than tokons, representing values re-ceived for them much above their actual

The present actual value of the silver dollar is 85; cents, instead of 93 cents in 1878, at the start of compulsory coinage; and we are daily doing all we can to depress its value at home by laborious additions to the enormous home by laborious additions to the enormous pile in the treasury, until it threatens to topple over, carrying with it its faise and filmsy scaffolding of equivocating silver certificates, which, when redeemed, must be redeemed in a metal of quite another color. Silver will not be accepted for certificates while anything much better can be had. The accumulated tons of silver dollars now held by the treasury are a conspicuous overproduction, reorganized, distrusted, and avoided by overybody.

We are compelled to seek and to use at least $24,000,000 of revenue annually, with an option which allows the use of $48,000,000 above all that would otherwise be required, in order to perpetuate the colossal folly of hoarding 3,455 tons of silver dollars, 742 tons of fractional silver, and 140 tons of silver bullion, as useless, either to the government or to the tional silver, and 140 tons of silver bullion, as uscless, either to the government or to the people, as the buried treasure of Capt. Kidd.

It may be falsely supposed that the large accumulation of silver dollars in the treasury is there for the redemption of outstanding silver certificates, but not one of these certificates ever has been or ever will be presented by the holder for redemption in silver. They will all be tendered at the custom house, instead of gold, the first moment our exchanges teel the shock of an adverse balance of trade, or whenever there is an excess of imports over exports, and then the real difference between the standard of our gold and silver coins will and then the real difference between the standard of our gold and silver coins will become painfully manifest. We are bound by law to accept and receive silver certificates, in violation of our pledged public faith, as the equivalent of gold, at the custom house. the equivalent of gold, at the custom house. When the contingency occurs exposing the hollow truce existing between our gold and silver silver standards, gold will become a fugitive and sink, below the horizon, and a flickering single standard of silver, whether up or down, will become dominant. The disastrous effects thus to arise cannot fail to disjoint our whole commerce, and will invade the home of every wage-receiving laborer of the country.

whole commerce, and will invade the home of every wage-receiving laborer of the country. Falling to keep our proper share of the products of our own gold mines, as well as allver, all the evils of a suddenly depreciated currency will be sure to revisit us, and with a proclamation that they come to stay.

Mr. Morrill then reviewed at length the history of the coinage from the first coluage act of 1792, and showed that while gold had but a slight feethold in our country from 1792 to 1834, silver had as little from 1837 to 1853, and then referred to the history of the trade dollar. He said that there are in circulation, at the present time, $93,953,780 of our silver coinage. There are also $141,337,535 more in the treasury, which the government would be only too glad to unload. Half as much of fractional silver, and about three these as many silver dollars are now in the treasury as are held by the people.

Mr. Morrill criticised the laws by which the designs and devices of the mint are limited to those of eighty years ago, and said that our coins should, from their size and character, be easily distinguishable, whether by sight or touch, one from another, and there should be no silver on nickel coins which, by being gilded, would simulate and pass for gold.

He urged a higher real value in fractional which, by being gilded, would simulate and pass for gold.

He urged a higher real value in freeling silver coins, or a restoration to perties which they held until degradual abolition of the nickel substitution of not han two mills in value.

He concinded as follows:

Heyong all these points, let me urge that our coins, in aptness of design and perfection of artistic execution, shall not be inferior, as they confessedly are, to any foreign examples, and certainly not inferior to the ordinary work of the best silversmiths or goldsmiths. Let us have American coins so good that the people will be willing to work for them, and gladly carry them at their own expense, without asking free transportation from the government.

deposited in the corner stones of many large edifices speciments of the United States coins. Should these ever become visible to a distant posterity, will they be likely to reflect much honor upon those who have thus challenged future consideration? The rapid extinction going on in our public debt, and the wonderful growth of the country in population and wealth, indicate that our great scaport on the Atlantic, and possibly another on the Pacific, may ere long prove to be an aggressive competitor for the controlling monetary power of the world. Producing all the silver and gold that we require for domestic use, with a large supplus to supply the demands of others less fortunate, may we not declare in Cromwellian phrascology, "that in the beauty of mechanical execution the coins of this nation should not be behind any nation?" And, therefore, let me urge that here and now is a proper time and opportunity for some action creditable to the government, worthy of congress, and such as will have the lasting approval of the people.

Mr. Morgan offered a resolution, which was agreed to, instructing the committee on Indian affairs to inquire into the policy and expediency of creating a military academy west of the Mississippi river for the training and education of Indian youths and men up to a proper age as soldiers, and to admit them, when qualified, into the regular army of enlisted men.

Mr. Hoar introduced a bill concerning federal election. It provides for the use of a certain specified form of patented ballot box and counting device, and requires all balloting and counting of ballots to be done in open meeting, the meeting not to be adjourned until all ballots are counted and the result publicly proclaimed in such open meeting by the officer in charge, which officer shall be a United States marshall or supervisor, who shall be custodian of the boxes, &c., as the representative of the attorney general, who shall have primary charge of and responsibility for such boxes.

Mr. Tucker called up the resolutions previously offered by him referring to the committee on elections the papers in the Virginia contested election case of Garrison vs. Mayo, with instructions to that committee to decide upon the prima facie right to the seat, without prejudice to the final decision on the merits.

In support of his resolution Mr. Tucker said that all preliminary proceedings of the swearing in of members under the law depended on the regularity of the certificates presented by each member. It was something preliminary to organization. But when the members were sworn in the house was organized, and was acting under the constitution which gave it the right to judge of the election of its own members.

The democratic party would do justice in these contested election cases, and his action was not prompted by any desire to do injustice to Mr. Mayo.

Mr. Buckner offered a resolution referring

CONGRESSIONAL SPLINTERS. CONGRESSIONAL SPLINTERS.

Maj. Ben: Perly Poore finds his labors in preparing the new Congressional Directory somewhat retarded by the delay of senators and members in sending the statistical information required. The joint committee on public printing has positively directed the compiler to publish nothing except what answers the following questions: The senator's, representative's, or delegate's full name; home postoffice address; place and time of birth; education; professional studies; profession or business; and all civil or military offices held, with dates of holding them. Representatives and delegates will add their vote on their last election to congress; the vote on their last election to congress; the name of their opposent, and the vote giver, him; and the politics of each. Several of the congressmen were trying to discover when Mr. Carlisle would appoint his committees. If they are not to be made up before the holidays many of the members will before the helidays many of the members will go home in a day or two and remain until January. There is considerable uncertainty about the matter, and soveral members have understood that Mr. Carlisle would not wait until all the committees were arranged before announcing them, but would let each one be known as soon as it was arranged. It was decided at the last caucus that Mr. Carlisle abould announce his committee on elections in a few nounce his committee on elections in a few days, but it is not probable that he will other-wise depart from the usual rule.
